Kursbeschreibung:

In this exercise we examine different methods and measurements that have been used to research intrastate armed conflict in international relations and comparative politics. In particular, this exercise will focus on questions pertaining to the measurement and estimation of conflict-related violence. You will be taught to criticize the construction, the use of and the conclusions drawn from a selected group of studies that utilize these measures. Application of these measures will also introduce students to special conflict-related problems that are closely linked to social scientific research and measurement. Since this course is designed as an exercise, we will set enough time aside to discuss some tools that help you improve your research design, methods and overall work flow. This exercise will be taught in English.
